

I subscribe to satellite radio so that I have a choice in the programming that I can hear. As local radio consolidates under a few large national chains, choice on the airwaves is rapidly disappearing. Unless I want to listen to the few formats that are commercially popular, I'm left out. With satellite radio, however, I'm back in control. That control should also extend to where I receive my local weather and traffic. If satellite radio can provide that information in a way better suited to me, then I should be able to receive that info in that manner. Local broadcasters should worry more about improving their product than trying to restrict what satellite radio can do.